In 1910, Jack Johnson, the first African American heavyweight boxing champion, was convicted of violating the Mann Act, which prohibited the transportation of women across state lines for "immoral purposes." The woman in question was Lucille Cameron, a white woman from Chicago. Johnson and Cameron had been in a relationship for several years, and they had a child together.

Johnson's conviction was widely seen as a miscarriage of justice. Many people believed that he was being punished for his race, and for his relationship with a white woman. Johnson appealed his conviction, but it was upheld by the Supreme Court. He served seven months in prison.

After his release from prison, Johnson continued to box. He fought in exhibitions and charity matches, but he never regained his title. He died in a car accident in 1946.

Lucille Cameron never married again. She raised her son, Jack Jr., on her own. She died in 1968.
